Force Internet Explorer 8 to load external JavaScript files before ones in the same directory Possible Duplicate: Force Internet Explorer 8 to load external JavaScript files before ones in the same directory Using IE8, I am getting weird behavior with JavaScript from other sites. For example, on this site I am testing, the links on the right side of the page work for the first time, but then the script in the footer won't execute. The problem is that it appears that IE8 isn't loading the script in the footer until it sees a script on the page. I need it to load the script from the top of the page first, and then move on to the scripts on the page. Is there a way to make this happen? Thanks. A: You can use defer attribute in your script tag like this. The defer attribute indicates that the script should be executed after the other linked resources, such as images, have finished loading but before the document finishes parsing.
