Links: The next time you take a walk around your neighborhood, look down. What do you see? Maybe a few plants growing along the sidewalk? If you're a dog lover, you may see several yellow caution cones posted around the bushes and trees. "Caution" cones are a nationwide trend, as local municipalities struggle to keep dogs in check. A lot of states have dog laws, but they are sometimes difficult to enforce or can be difficult to change. No one seems to really know why these caution cones are so prevalent, but there are a few theories about why. There are obvious reasons: One theory is that these cones are designed to discourage dog owners from walking their dogs off-leash. However, that's not the most common reason, according to veterinarian Dr. Sharon Jensen, who explained, "An off-leash dog isn't necessarily going to end up on a sidewalk." Some municipalities claim that they use the cones to prevent people from feeding their dogs, or to let dog owners know that they are safe to let their dogs do their business in 2d92ce491b
