Docosaehaenoic acid down-regulates the expression of the rat brain-derived neurotrophic factor and c-myc genes. We have examined the effects of docosaehaenoic acid (DHA) on the expression of the neuronal cell-specific trophic factor, brain-derived neurotrophic factor (BDNF) and on the expression and activity of c-myc gene in the PC12 cell line. cells were incubated with 5 microM DHA for 24 h and the expression of BDNF and c-myc mRNAs was measured by Northern and dot blot analysis. DHA inhibited BDNF mRNA levels and c-myc mRNA levels in a dose- and time-dependent manner. Moreover, inhibition of cell proliferation by DHA was observed only when the cells were cultured in the presence of 10 microM DHA. The inhibitory effects of DHA were not limited to the expression of BDNF and c-myc; an increase in cell death was observed. DHA induced cell death by activating the caspases. In addition, DHA suppressed the activity of the Sp1-dependent BDNF promoter. Thus, DHA down-regulates the expression of neuronal cell-specific trophic
