performed in 1 well-characterized study population in a single region and therefore, the results are unlikely to be generalizable to other patient populations. However, the study strengths include the large sample size, random selection of participants, adequate participation rate, exclusion of participants with acute or recent MI, and limited adjustment for potential confounders. In addition, the findings were robust in sensitivity analyses. Conclusion {#jah31506-sec-0022} ===== In this large community-based sample of individuals with a recent MI, the usual-care management of CABG versus PCI is not associated with better functional or survival outcomes compared with PCI with DES implantation. However, a residual reduction in mortality was observed among patients who underwent CABG. The results of the present study highlight the value of adjunctive treatment options in the management of patients with MI undergoing revascularization procedures. Sources of Funding {#jah31506-sec-0023} ===== The COURAGE-PCI Trial was
