Starting and Stopping a Single Transaction in BigQuery I need to run a series of complex queries that will be allowed to run for an unlimited time. The queries can take hours or days to run. They are all part of a larger DDL pipeline, but I need to save time by having them run in their own transactions, each with an identifier so that they can be rolled back safely if necessary. However, I want to find the best way to start a single transaction and commit it quickly. So for example, if my query/DDL pipeline is split into multiple stages and I have stored the transaction ID at the start of each stage, and that stage fails, I could tell BigQuery to rollback the rest of the transaction. I'm a bit stuck as to how to do this efficiently, given the limitations of SQL transactions. It seems the ability to perform a function call within an SQL transaction has been removed. Is there a way to do this in BigQuery? I'm tempted to put the DDL pipeline in its own GCP service account, so I can use Cloud Functions. Does that allow me to start a transaction and then put the results in Cloud Storage? Or is that too complicated? A: I would like to suggest that the best way to accomplish your aims is to isolate these processes into isolated GCP services that can do whatever needs doing, and still get an audit trail and that can be rolled back in the case that one needs to be. This has the added benefit of having the code be reusable for future work. In addition, you might find that doing most of this work outside of GCP services allows you to use what is often faster and cheaper off-the-shelf tools, or to store the data in a different way (e.g. something like BigTable, where you
