In a process for manufacturing semiconductor devices, a variety of inspection methods are carried out for maintaining the manufacturing process on the control of a defective product rate as low as possible. As one of the methods, there has been known a method in which a semiconductor wafer on which a semiconductor device is formed is irradiated with a electron beam and the detected image data of the irradiated semiconductor wafer is analyzed to detect a defect on the wafer. For example, as shown in FIG. 1, a defect inspection apparatus 100 has a specimen chamber 102 into which a semiconductor wafer is inserted. In the specimen chamber 102, a wafer W is irradiated with an electron beam EB to cause the beam EB to hit the surface of the wafer W to detect a defect. A defect detecting apparatus 104 includes a block
