To describe the development and implementation of a didactic program for medical students in pediatrics that provides the core competencies for practicing pediatricians. Development of the program by a group of experts representing residency programs, residency training centers, medical education centers, and the Division of Pediatric Medicine, Johns Hopkins University. A didactic curriculum was developed and implemented in 2006 in the first 2 years of a 4-year curriculum. The curriculum integrates the core competencies of pediatrics with the experiences of practicing pediatricians, from the initial years of training through residency, and continuing education. The program consists of a total of 15 didactic sessions covering the following competencies: medical ethics, communication skills, patient-physician relationships, understanding and addressing adolescent issues, professionalism, pharmacology and medication management, nutrition, complementary and alternative therapies, pain management, mental health, and health maintenance. During the 5-year evaluation period, a retrospective pre-post survey of graduating interns using an anonymous questionnaire was administered. The response rate was 100%. Participants agreed that the program fulfilled the stated objectives for the didactic curriculum, and there was a significant increase in confidence in 5 of 6 core competencies (p < .05).
