The disclosed embodiments of the present invention relate to a circuit, and more particularly to a system and a method for integrating a multistage filter into an array substrate for mobile devices. As we all know, a low-pass filter is a device that is typically used to remove a high-frequency component from an input signal. One known example of the low-pass filter is a two-stage filter. This two-stage filter includes a first stage filter and a second stage filter. The first stage filter can be a passive low-pass filter, and the second stage filter is often realized by an active filter. Because the first stage filter is a passive filter, and the second stage filter is an active filter, therefore the two-stage filter provides better attenuation at a high frequency than the single passive filter. In addition, for a multi-stage filter, the number of stages can be increased. For example, there are three stages or more. When the number of stages increases, the system size increases. Accordingly, it is desired to implement a multistage filter on a relatively small-size array substrate. For an array substrate, the second stage filter is usually implemented by a fixed-value resistor. The resistance value of the fixed-value resistor is usually different for different filter stages.

As a result, the gain at the different filter stages is different. If the resistance value of the resistor is not equal for different stages, then the gain may be different for the different filter stages. For the fiscal year that ended June 30, 2017, the city of Portland's general fund tax revenue dropped 5.2 percent compared to the previous year, and 12.2 percent compared to five years ago, according to a City Auditor's report. The tax revenue decreased $49 million, as compared to $190 million in 2016, and $79 million in 2013. The decrease in tax revenue is attributed to the city's efforts to balance the budget and avoid large tax increases this year. The city ended the year with a projected $37 million budget surplus, but Mayor Ted Wheeler said the surplus is being
