

Em Curitiba, o Psicotécnico, Instituto da Fase de Bônus, com o apoio da Fundação de Amparo à Pesquisa do Estado de São Paulo, realizou o evento #FazerPublikáveTecnologia7, em 2017. O evento aconteceu das 9 às 18h do dia 7 de dezembro e contou com a participação de Prof. Dr. Vitor Cardoso (UNESP), Prof. Dr. Nelson Lemos (UNIFESP), Prof. Dr. Llewellyn Nascimento (UNIFESP), Prof. Dr. João Augusto da Cruz (UFESP), Prof. Dr. Marcelo Romualdo (PUC-SP), Prof. Dr. Paulo Andrade (PUCSP) e Prof. Dr. Paulo César Nascimento (UFESP). Conheça mais na íntegra as palestras: A: There is not one single book-jumping library out there that does this. If you have a subscription to three of them and have the right license, you could try one out. Hyperphysics of two years ago was one of those but it seems it has stopped. Another solution is to use ePub3. Since ePub3 takes no license restrictions, you can easily use more than one book-jumping library from one work and have the whole set read in one installation. A: I'm getting data from a library so I can build a view that does this, you could easily accomplish the same with your library of choice. ESO 3346-55, a newly discovered protoplanetary disk around the star V2775 Oph. Credit: ESO/L. Calçada The galaxy V2775 Oph is a lot like our own Milky Way—with one important difference: The star, located 230 parsecs (750 light years) away, is going through a brown-dwarf-type phase of growth, and has an especially active protoplanetary disk. ESA's Herschel Space Telescope was able to detect the dust that swirls around this star, allowing astronomers to study the properties of its protoplanetary disk. V2775 Oph is a
