2. Choose the New Layer icon, shown in Figure 1-3, to create a new layer on top of the Photo layer. The image window now has a layer dock on the right side, which is shown in Figure 1-3. The previous layers are on a layer below the photo layer. 3. Choose Layer > New > Layer from Background. A new, empty layer opens on top of the Photo layer. Figures 1-3, 1-4, and 1-5 show the Photo layer, the Background layer, and the new layer. Figures 1-3, 1-4, and 1-5: You can see the Photo layer below the Background layer and the new layer on top. Each image is on a separate layer. The next step changes the image's layers. 4. To see a more distinct layer interface, choose Window > Workspace. At the top of the Photoshop window, the workspace contains a pop-up menu. Click to choose the tab you want to use. You can choose one of the following settings: * _File_ * _Edit_ * _View_ * _Tools_ * _Help_ Your decision determines which set of menus is displayed in the window. At the bottom of the workspace, you'll find two tabs: Layers and Paths. If the current tab isn't set to Layers, click on it. Whether you use the Layers or Paths tab controls how you see and manipulate your layers. Layers view lets you see the various layers as you manipulate them. You click the name to change its layer or remove it. Paths view is similar, but you see the layers as you draw them on the screen. You select layers by clicking their thumbnail in the layer listing, and you draw paths by clicking the plus button to the right of the image. It's helpful to learn how to use the various tools while working in Paths view. It's also possible to edit paths in either view.

Ever since I learned how to manipulate photos, I've been using Photoshop more or less daily to make things. It's not the easiest program in the world, but it's also not the easiest program to know how to use. I've since moved on to editing RAW photos in Lightroom instead of in Photoshop, but Photoshop is still a major part of my workflow: I use it to color correct photos, convert RAW images to JPEGs, and even clean up nude shots. My Photoshop hacks are similar to a lot of the other features on this page: anything that makes my life a little easier. Sometimes that's typing in a hexadecimal color code, or choosing a filter, or applying a specific curve profile. But most of the time, it's about making the computer do work that I didn't want it to do in the first place. Let's be clear: If Photoshop is asking to do things that you don't like to do, or are difficult to do, you're definitely not Photoshop-savvy. Color corrects photos. If you don't know how to balance colors in a good photo, Photoshop's special effects are your friend. You can adjust brightness, contrast and hue to bring out the eye of a subject, change the skin tone, or even make your subject look blue-eyed and Scandinavian. Just use the eyedropper tool to select a color you want the object to become and adjust the sliders. Just like with film, you're not always happy with a photo's colors after adjustment, but you may learn a little about photography a681f4349e

Easter eggs, which contain chocolate eggs filled with toys, cake or jelly, are traditionally given out as part of the Easter egg hunt. The offer was due to end at 13:59 BST on Saturday, according to The Sun. Kinder Egg was started in the UK in 1964 by the International Dairy Farm in Glasgow. Media playback is unsupported on your device Media caption A three-egg combined free offer The free egg is the same size as standard Kinder Egg, but instead of all coming in the same colour the eggs are different shapes and sizes, including a nod to animal shapes. The eggs are normally given away at Easter in plastic bags, however this year they are being distributed from 11:00 BST on Easter Sunday until 16:00 BST on Easter Monday. The extra time could be useful if parents want to celebrate Easter with children on Good Friday. There will also be a combined free offer on this year's Easter eggs. Image copyright Twitter Cakeshop owner Lisa Dowling, of Lisa's the Cake Shop in Toxteth, Liverpool, told the BBC that for a limited time she will be giving away a combined free Egg and Cake. "One of us has bought the whole shop of chocolate eggs and my partner buys the Easter cake. I'm keeping the rest for Easter," she said. "It can't be bought because it's a free egg and we are giving it away," she said. The decision to offer a combined free offer has been made in recognition of those who have been affected by the flooding in the south of England. Image copyright A and K Cakes Co. Trudeau defends Liberal approach to SNC-Lavalin in Senate foreign-affairs committee hearing OTTAWA (Reuters) - Canada's prime minister on Wednesday defended his government's decision to grant a deferred prosecution agreement (DPA) to Quebec engineering firm SNC-Lavalin, setting it off on a collision course with opposition parties. During a two-hour closed-door Senate committee hearing, Foreign Affairs Minister Chrystia Freeland rejected a question about whether the DPA had damaged relations with United States. "There is no U.S. law problem," Freeland said, but noted there had been numerous U.S. political concerns over the deal. "I don't think that there is any principled reason that we should be discussing U.S. domestic politics," she said. The government made the decision to approve the DPA with the understanding that the firm would be prosecuted if it committed the same offence again. ADVERTISEMENT

That it has been charged with fraud, bribery and corruption offenses by the Quebec authorities is therefore a gross overstatement of the DPA's actual effect. Government hopes to become the first G7 country to secure a DPA - a move that has proved controversial in countries such as Germany, South Korea, France and Finland. Freeland said her office received 40,000 pieces of correspondence since January on the SNC-Lavalin affair. The minister also said staff in the department's legal division met weekly for a year to decide on the DPA. "It is not an easy decision, but it has never been reversed," she added. Opposition parties criticized the government's decision to approve the DPA and said it undermined trust in Canada's justice system. "It just shows the government is out of touch with Canadians," New Democratic Party leader Jagmeet Singh said. ADVERTISEMENT Conservative leader Andrew Scheer was asked whether the deal with SNC-Lavalin would affect future federal politics. "If the prime minister's policies are lawless, then his political office will follow," he said. The hearings are part of a parliamentary "lock-up" that will last at least until Friday. As of Wednesday, the opposition parties had not formally submitted questions to
