(AP) — A second visitor center is planned for the North Fork, and its construction is set to begin this fall. The Glacier Public Service District board unanimously voted to pursue the project Thursday. The region is home to two of the park's busiest roads and the access point to the main park, Upper St. Mary Lake. A visitor center and parking lot are in the works near the main park, and plans call for the second one to be built on the North Fork Road at Heart Lake. Park officials say Heart Lake is the closest entrance for visitors who arrive from outside the park. A cost estimate was not provided Thursday. Glacier National Park is open year-round. The $1.1 million project would consist of two buildings — one which would be the main visitor center and the other would be used as a satellite office. Copyright 2014 The Associated Press.
