Google Clips Now Animate - k_sze ====== _jn This is a neat little demonstration. I saw this in Apple's keynote presentation, but didn't think much of it until this. "Okay, so a moving video, not moving objects. Let's see how it does with photos..." My initial reaction was: WTF? So have they finally figured out how to animate GIFs? But then, since I didn't know how GIFs could be animated, my next thought was: Amazing! Sure, this isn't the solution to everything, but it's pretty cool. ~~~ k_sze I tried to find out more about it online, but haven't found much. The information I found just provides vague descriptions about the technology involved. ------ dangrossman I've been using the demo video from Google IO a lot lately. They used to have better video editing on their video editing site -- this just isn't as immediate. If you're a new user to clips, it might be better to start there. [~~~ fuzzywalrus Yeah, I am curious to see how this vid will be represented. Given that we see the text for what in the traditional sense is the first time with other tools today, do we see Google Clips as a type of optical character recognition, text-to-speech, av-to-video, or video-to-text processor? I'd like to see the tool be extended to include sound, too. ~~~ dangrossman It's really a multitasker as far as video editors go -- we were using it like a simple screen recording tool. ~~~ fuzzywalrus Thanks for the feedback.

I want to create an SQLite database and have this statement in there: CREATE TABLE IF NOT EXISTS Nudge (user TEXT NOT NULL, timestamp INTEGER NOT NULL DEFAULT 0, request TEXT NOT NULL, PRIMARY KEY(user, timestamp)); It's the syntax for sqlite3. What do the colons: (,),? for? I don't understand it. A: The leading statement, CREATE TABLE IF NOT EXISTS, tells the database management system (DBMS) that you will be creating a table, but you don't mind if the table already exists. In that case, simply run the second statement. The? in (,) tells the DBMS that you will be putting a default value for the field. The? in (?) tells the DBMS that you will be inserting a value if no previous value is found. (The? acts as a placeholder.)
