Dana Rohrabacher, R-Calif., on Monday, in a response to a query from a pharmaceutical industry-funded group about the effectiveness of the marijuana industry. Rohrabacher has been a consistent supporter of the establishment of a federally-legalized marijuana industry, which he declared would be "a red carpet for big drug dealers in the United States." "I've voted on that repeatedly," he declared. "I've been voting for every measure we could pass here." "And I've always voted for the budget that allows the DEA to continue to outsource the task of intercepting plants and drugs to the private sector, and they do that now," he added. In an interview with the Los Angeles Times on Monday, Rohrabacher clarified his comments, indicating that he did not think a federal resolution to legalize marijuana will pass this Congress, or even the next. However, he said that a resolution to supply terminally-ill patients with access to marijuana — using marijuana sold in private establishments — is likely. “I’d hope that we can move on a rational basis, and that there’s a chance that the resolution to allow marijuana to be freely grown, freely exchanged, and freely smoked — that could be voted on.” “But it’s not at all certain that we will pass it,” he added. This August, two new polls suggested that the Democrats might have an opening to expand their marijuana industry protections on Capitol Hill, with a new Gallup poll showing that majorities of Americans now support the “legalization of
