Merchant Marine Rules Of The Road (April-2022)

Merchant Marine rules are a set of principles designed for safe navigation and transportation of hazardous materials. Rules of the road were designed with the primary objective of "increasing safety, thereby reducing the risk of losses to the public in the event of an emergency situation, while also reducing the risks to those involved, such as commercial vessels, mariners and even airline pilots". The Merchant Marine Act of 1920 established the US Merchant Marine to provide a regular, organized, reliable and economical sea traffic service for the safe and efficient movement of vessels and cargoes, and for the protection of life and property at sea. However, it is the detailed tables that lead to the law that make Merchant Marine rules for this special maritime regulation effective. Each of these tables states a more specific regulation. This information can be downloaded in PDF format from the US Coast Guard website. The Merchant Marine Rules of the Road are made up of 4 groups of regulations that are organized into 11 individual tables. The first group of regulations represents general general rules of road (GGRR). The second group of regulations contains regulations made up of specific class of vessels, including Merchant Vessels. The third group contains those regulations applicable to boats and vessels, and the fourth group contains regulations concerning the movement of the vessel. Each of these rules is designated by the number: 1, 2, 3, 4. If you are looking at a merchant vessel you will notice that the rules of the road for such vessels are highlighted in a different color than those for other types of vessels.
