* _Photoshop for Dummies_ (Wiley) * _Photoshop Elements for Dummies_ (Wiley) * _Adobe Photoshop CS3, Flash CS3_, and _Adobe Photoshop CS5: The Missing Manual_ by Stephen Sass (John Wiley & Sons) ## Adobe Acrobat _Adobe Acrobat_ is a program for organizing digital documents and images as well as for displaying them. It also allows users to create digital signatures (which are also known as _Acrobat digital signatures_) and watermarks (which are similar to digital signatures). It comes in two flavors: * A mobile version that runs on devices such as the iPhone, iPad, and Kindle Fire. This version of Adobe Acrobat does not contain the types of features that people use to create and manage documents and does not allow you to customize the digital signature. * A desktop version that you install on your computer. With this version, you can create digital signatures and watermarks. After you install Adobe Acrobat on your computer, you use the Get Adobe Acrobat function on the Get Programs window to find its installation folder. (For more about Get Programs, see Step 4 of the previous procedure.) From there, you can follow these steps: 1. Open the folder. Your Acrobat installation folder contains two files: AdobeAcrobatReader.exe (which allows you to launch and use the program) and Acrobat.prc (the Acrobat settings file, which controls the program's appearance and behavior). You can use the tools provided by Acrobat to create signatures, watermarks, and a digital darkroom. You can print a page so that it appears with the custom signature or watermark as a print overlay. 2. View or create the watermark. 3. Click the Print button on the toolbar. You see the Print dialog, which you can use to specify both the printer you want to use and how the document should print. As an alternative to using the Print dialog box, you can open a print dialog by selecting File⇒Print or by pressing Alt+P. 4. Click Overlays and scroll to the second page in the dialog. The dialog box looks similar to Figure 14-10. The dialog box includes a variety of items that enable you to customize the look of the

Q: When to use in-house company for legal research? I work at a company with legal department. After certain change (politically motivated), my department decided to not recommend/prepare any in-house company for any legal research. That is clear in, for example, a conclusion where we say that we do not provide any legal opinion regarding a certain case, and we specifically state that we provide such opinion only for the employer of the company. This comes for a variety of reasons. First, it is no longer clear for us. Second, one should not rely on us, because we are not legally competent. Third, we have no idea whether we do research or not (but we know that we do not).
Question: When should I use the in-house company for a legal research? Let's say, I want a conclusion that I can only get from at least three sources. Should I assume that it is of big benefit to them and thus I should ask them to do it? My department agreed that it is possible to do this kind of research. I just do not know when. Additional info: I am trying to avoid commercial legal research, and I am talking about cases that are well within the scope of my department. My opinion, which I cannot prove, is that if we are competent enough, we can figure it out on our own. Thus, I would like to do it only when I doubt my department's competence. A: I'm not a lawyer. But I am a marketing guy and marketing guys are into quantifying the value of things. Based on my experience, for a big company like Microsoft and the like, you should always use the (internal) legal advice from lawyers in their group. No matter whether you are the customer or not, of course. I would argue that if your own group is not good enough to provide this legal advice, your company isn't big enough to afford having a group that is good enough and therefore the only option is to use outside counsel. Of course that does not mean that "big company"!= "needs outside counsel". It would be the same for a large company and an individual that needs to hire an attorney. The big companies I deal with, which is quite a few, generally have lawyers that have specialized in complex contracts, licensing agreements etc. that are competent to address these issues. Also, many lawyers do not specialize in tech.

Enantioselective and activity-structure-activity relationships of electrophilic conjugate addition to nitroalkene are effectively interpreted by CDK2/cyclin A complex model. Enantioselective [3 + 2] dipolar cycloaddition reaction between nitroalkene and aromatic epoxides catalyzed by chiral bis-oxazoline catalysts and its activities and diastereoselectivities are analyzed by normal mode analysis method of enzyme dynamics. Dynamic parameters and electrostatic potential are derived based on the normal mode analysis method. The parameters are correlated with experimental and computed transition state descriptors such as activation energies and entropies and compared with enantioselectivity of catalytic systems by both nonlinear regression and linear regression correlation analysis. An excellent correlation was found between chiral bis-oxazoline catalyst and CDK2/cyclin A complex (CDK2/cyclin A complex can be used as a mimic of CDK2/cyclin A for the dipolar cycloaddition reaction). The chiral bis-oxazoline catalyst acts as a template in the CDK2/cyclin A complex. Thus the chiral bis-oxazoline catalyst is also analyzed by CDK2/cyclin A complex model.
Q: Ordering of an array in python Given an array like below. arr = [[1,5,4], [1,2,3], [1,4,2], [4,2,5], [4,2,5], [1,4,5], [4,5,2]] How can I get the final array like this arr = [[1,2,3], [1,4,5], [4,2,5]] I have tried sorting the array in each subarrays but it didn't work. A: Since you are sorting the entries in each sub-array in ascending order
