ScreenShots A: "Project Server Setup" is the name for MS Project Server 2013. It's covered in depth in the TechNet Evaluation Center - here's the link. As for a GUI tool, you will need to download MS Project Professional 13. I. Field of the Invention The invention relates to an improved method for performing two-dimensional chemical analysis of gases. More specifically, the invention relates to an improved method for performing two-dimensional chemical analysis by the measurement of optical absorption of excited matter in the presence of oxygen, the absorption measurement being based on an electronically-shifted pulse-pair laser chemical reaction. The method finds particular utility for performing near infrared spectroscopy in a remote sensing mode. II. Description of the Related Art Chemical analysis of gases by spectroscopic techniques is commonly performed using a process known as pulsed laser absorption spectroscopy. Briefly, the absorption process is based on a reaction of excited matter with a suitable agent, the absorption of which is indicative of the composition of the gas. The reaction takes place in a container, typically a gas cell, which provides two-dimensional confinement of the reactant and product species during the chemical reaction. During the chemical reaction, a beam of laser light is directed into the reaction cell, and as a result of the chemical reaction, one or more optical products are created from the excited matter. The optical products are observable through the window of the gas cell, where they may be detected by a suitable detector. This process of optical detection, also termed optical absorption, is well known and has been used for well over 50 years. In one common form of pulsed laser absorption spectroscopy, a pulsed laser excites matter in a reaction cell, the product species produced from the chemical reaction are spectrally analyzed to obtain a chemical analysis of the matter. The reactions and species resulting from the reaction are confined in the
