Why is this happening? I know they have a limit of 20,000 bytes in a POST but why is this happening even with 1,000 files with no line breaks in the name? EDIT: As someone hinted I am using Wordpress and the version I am using is 3.8.1. I can't find an answer anywhere since I couldnt find where is the problem. I am also adding in a request using cURL with no success. Any suggestions? A: The reason why the field is too long is probably because you are exceeding the maximum length of 80,000 bytes when building a multipart/form-data POST request. Wordpress HTTP headers are required by Wordpress to be able to find the maximum length of these POST fields and prevent the user from posting an invalid form. At some point the POST request triggers Wordpress to generate a new form and so you get the errors that you see. Try using a shorter name for the form field, if possible. Here is a quote from Wordpress This is a sanity check. If the post_max_size value is set to greater than the maximum upload size for the user's site, and the received form exceeds that size, a Multipart error occurs and post_max_size is set to the maximum upload size. There are a couple of ways to check this If you have an open source plugin that posts the form data to a different server or you know the login data to do so, you can disable the function that does this. This will allow you to see what the problem is. You could perform the same check and post it to If you use ErrorDocument to catch missing files or empty forms you may be able to identify what is triggering the form to be produced and therefore can investigate the reason. UPDATE Based on some more searching of Wordpress and you have $_POST = array('avatar_status' => 'On', 'name' => 'User Name', 'password' => 'Password1', 'email' => 'xxx',); So I would say your field has a name of avatar_status since the other names do not have a space in them. This will cause Wordpress to create a form with a field name of avatar_status. This will exceed the maximum length of the field
