

[Nancy Borrett was until recently the president of a major national advertising agency. She's also a photographer and an artist. The article below first appeared in January 2009 in the Daily Press, Yolo County's newspaper.] As an artist myself, I've always been intrigued by the ability of a tool to inspire new ideas. For example, I found that even though digital images came along and enabled us to create many kinds of images that were previously difficult to produce, the ability to manipulate these images also meant that new ideas could be realized. As an artist who uses Photoshop, I found that I have not only learned to creatively use a sophisticated tool, but I also learned how to do things I've never even considered before. Photoshop is magic, and I use it a lot. I use it to make a lot of things: I use it to make things look good and make things look worse, to fix problems and to exaggerate things. In all of these uses, I have learned to be creative in my use of Photoshop, which has changed the way I look at and at times transform my photos into something much different than I intended. One of the first things I learned to do is to completely transform a photo into something completely different than how it originally looked. This lesson I learned by accident, as I was trying to make my wedding pictures into something that would be much more professional than how I took them. I decided that I wanted the pictures to look like the cliché "lifestyle" photographs you see of couples smiling blissfully at each other. I decided to use the "insert" function to put in a picture of my best friend and I as we were sitting in a restaurant. I thought I was finished; I had a simple image of the two of us smiling together. When I opened the image, however, I saw that it was not working. Something was wrong. I looked at the photograph and realized that it was too small. At first, I tried increasing the size of the photograph. This seemed to fix the problem, but I was having trouble with the image being only in black and white. Suddenly, I understood the problem: the photo needed to be colorized. I learned from that mistake. The next day, I was remembering this and I went into Photoshop and inserted a picture of a sunset into the program. I then thought that I would make this picture from a photograph I took of the SINGAPORE - A 41-year-old ex-Navy petty officer was sentenced to three months' jail on Friday (Oct 18) for kicking a woman in a public toilet at a Sentosa Night Safari last year. An additional six months' jail will be imposed for abusing the victim psychologically. The woman, 28, was with her boyfriend on July 24 last year when she was picked up by a man outside the park. She was handcuffed and taken to the toilet to be raped by the man, but the door was locked and she could not get out. She tried to make a noise to alert a male attendant, who did not respond, but the man kicked her in the chest until she fell unconscious. Deputy Public Prosecutor Low Chia Yan prosecuted for one charge of committing an indecent act on a woman by using threat of force. The woman fell unconscious for a few minutes and sustained minor injuries. Her boyfriend found her and called a taxi to go back to their condominium at 64 Clendenin Place, where the woman resided. Police arrived shortly after and arrested the man. The woman received psychological counselling from the Singapore Psychological Association, but she said she was still afraid. The case was heard at the State Courts on Friday. The woman did not respond to a request for comment.
